DEFINITION

The term 'Media' is generally defined as an instrument of communication - for example newspaper, radio, television or film is commonly known as 'Industrial Media'. This form of communication is generally a one-way street where you can read a newspaper or listen to a report on television, but you have very limited ability to give your thoughts on the matter.

In contrast, 'Social Media' is a social instrument of communication - it is a two-way street that gives you the ability to communicate too. In Web terms, this would be a website that doesn't just give you information, but interacts with you while giving you that information. This interaction can be as simple as asking for your comments or letting you vote on an article. Any website that invites you to interact with the site (to share information and resources; and can include text, audio, video, images, podcasts, and other multimedia communications), and could include the interaction with other visitors, falls into the definition of Social Media.

Social Media may include (although is not limited to):

- social networking sites (e.g. Facebook, Messenger, Instagram, Myspace, LinkedIn)
- Social video and photo sharing websites (e.g. YouTube)
- blogs, including corporate blogs and personal blogs
- blogs hosted by media outlets (e.g. 'comments' or 'your say' feature in major newspapers)
- micro-blogging (e.g. Twitter)
- wikis and online collaborations (e.g. Wikipedia)
- forums, discussion boards and groups (e.g. Google groups)
- podcasting
- online multiplayer gaming platforms
- instant messaging (including SMS)
- Whats App
